Copyright Statement

The materials published by the Furniture History Society (FHS) on its website or in its Journal or through any other means, or reproduced, recorded, transmitted or stored on a retrieval system in any form are subject to copyright protection under the UK Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. This gives the copyright owner the exclusive right to restrict certain uses of the materials, subject to specific statutory exceptions that apply provided there is fair dealing by the user.

Such materials may be used by members for the purpose of non-commercial research or private study, subject to the condition of fair dealing, and provided you properly cite the copyright source (and the date you accessed the resource) where this is appropriate.

For all other uses by members of such materials, we ask that you contact the FHS in advance for written permission to reproduce the materials. When requesting such permission, please be prepared to refer specifically to the information you intend to use. (Contact information is given below.)

We also ask that if you intend to reproduce or quote from written, spoken or other material (including images) even if permitted by this Copyright Notice, you refer your proposals to the FHS before doing so in order to confirm their accuracy and context, although please remember that you remain solely responsible for fair dealing with regard to your proposals.
